Thomas W. Kivlan Memoir

The following is taken from the memoir of Thomas William Kivlan, Thomas Kivlan's son. Family lore has it that Thomas Kivlan was a Policeman in South Boston, Mass. The memoir corroborates this. It also suggests, due to Thomas W's. vague recollections of his father, that Thomas Kivlan died at an early age, when Thomas William Kivlan was five years of age.

"My very earliest recollection of him is rather confused in that it is difficult to relate first things first. I think that the earliest memory was one day when I stood at the corner of Telegraph Hill and Old Harbor Streets in South Boston. I had wandered a whole half block from our house and had been playing with some other boys. My father came from somewhere and I looked up at a long pair of blue pants ending in a dome shaped grey policeman's helmet topping a ruddy complexion and a grey flowing mustache with a very definitely severe look about the eyes. He gave me something---either candy or money---for my promise not to play with those bad boys. I think he took my hand and walked back home with me."

commended for the promptness and precision which attended their work of rescue and extinguishment.

(c) Capt. Charles A. Donohoe and Lieut. Dennis J. Bailey of Ladder Company 15, Lieut. Joseph P. Hanton of Ladder Company 13, Laddermen John J. Cremin, John F. Lawler, Cornelius J. Sullivan, Frank D. O'Brien, John J. Kennedy, John M. McLaughlin, Edward J. Donelan of Ladder Company 13, Laddermen William H. Gillis, Frederick J. Dobbratz, Charles A. Wolfe, William J. Shepard, John F. Murphy, Anthony E. Nelson, John J. Cunningham of Ladder Company 15, and Hoseman John J. Gleason of Engine Company 33 (detailed to Ladder Company 13), are highly commended for the bravery, zeal and judgment displayed by them in rescuing persons from the upper floors. By the prompt and judicious use of pompier ladders, above the reach of the 85-foot aerial ladders, it was possible for them to bring many persons to the street and to safety.

(d) Above all the meritorious work of that morning, marked for individual bravery and presence of mind, accompanied by great personal risk, stands the work of Lieut. Edward McDonough, aide to the Chief of Department, and Ladderman John J. Kennedy of Ladder Company 13.

Pompier Ladder Explanation:

The ladder, shaped like a question mark, is driven hook first into the window above the firefighter. The hook is pulled into the sill. Then the firefighter climbs to the window, straddles the sill, raises the ladder to the next floor and repeats the process until he reaches his destination. The pompier ladder is a simple, but effective tool for scaling buildings and saving lives.
